One of the defendants in the case was Thomas "Danny" Lee of the nearby St. Bernard Parish, a man who has been the subject of countless police raids over a nearly 30-year period. The day after he and others were rounded up, police surrounded and surrounded, locking them up in makeshift holding cells and placing their clothes in the dark to stifle the noise. That day he awoke and saw his house surrounded by police from nine different agencies. Lee, one of many people arrested as a result of the raid, described in an interview from jail the atmosphere: He felt completely dehumanized, without any personal protections. He didn't understand why he was.. Source Paul Chapman is the host of The Greatest Movie EVER! Podcast and GME! Anime Fun Time. On Friday, the state Supreme Court heard oral arguments in a lawsuit filed by people who live by the rules of the American Way. The case arose out of an early October 2011 police raid on a house in New Orleans in which 19 people who, unbeknownst to police, had guns and ammunition were locked up in a house next door to one another.
